Alcohol abuse in medical admissions in a tertiary care hospital in India. A study was conducted to assess the use of alcohol as a possible cause of illness and its correlation with a history of alcohol intake in adult patients admitted to the medicine in-patient services. A total of 1,333 patients were studied retrospectively. About 4% had an alcohol intake of ≥ 25 ml of pure alcohol per day (chronic alcoholics), and 19% of patients reported that they had consumed alcohol within the preceding 12 h. However, only 3.8% of patients admitted were chronic alcoholics. Moreover, there was no statistically significant correlation between the history of alcohol intake and presentation with illness. Hence, no definite conclusion regarding the relationship between alcohol intake and any illness can be drawn in this study.
